STRENGTHENING OUR COMMUNITY

INVESTING IN ITS FUTURE

INVESTING IN ITS FUTURE

As the Community Foundation nears its 25th birthday, we are honored by the community's support of our work and affirmation of our founders' basic beliefs in our business model:

1. *Donors appreciate a local "center for thoughtful philanthropy" with staff expertise that connects them with efforts they care about in their own community. This year we received more than 800 gifts totaling $41 million and made 1,795 grants totaling more than $23 million. More than 15 private foundations have now "re-established themselves" as Donor Advised Funds to take advantage of our operational expertise, bringing our total number of active Funds to 334.
2. *Investing long-term and endowed charitable assets as a pool indeed creates an economy of scale that multiplies philanthropic assets over time. Since we began, we have received contributions of $432 million and have made grants of $238 million, and our investments have increased our community's net philanthropic value by more than $73 million.
3. *An organization with a "big picture" that helps community members work together effectively for good can build bridges and leverage the work of community nonprofits to result in better, broader decision-making and impact. Our leadership and partnership with other community sectors to drive efforts like Columbus 2025, The Basics' early learning tools (cv.thebasics.org), Home for Good, area nonprofit leadership training, and conversations about strengthening local news availability exemplify the breadth of involvement donors foster by giving through, not to, CFCV.
4. *Our Founder's Society Endowment allows CFCV to operate sustainably, effectively, and exceptionally, while holding fees low. This year, we were certified once again by the Community Foundations National Standards Board as having operations that meet or exceed National Standards for U.S. Community Foundations. We have been certified continually since 2006, when we were among the first 150 community foundations to achieve the then-new designation.

The potential for these four beliefs was born with our founding board members, substantiated in our most recent strategic plan, and exemplified in the two overlapping infinity symbols in our logo. We are firmly committed to:

- Our donors and their philanthropic goals.
- Support of nonprofits and their community-strengthening efforts.
- The needs of our community at large.
- Organizational excellence and sustainability.

To those of you who already rely on the strength of CFCV, thank you. If this idea is new to you, enjoy the stories on these pages to learn more about our work, and let us know if we can help you become part of it!

HONORING A FAMILY LEGACY THROUGH GIVING

Losing his father in the Vietnam War didn't mean Ben Richardson grew up without role models. In addition to his mom, Richardson had two grandparents—his maternal grandfather, John Davis, Sr., and his fraternal grandmother, Rosetta Richardson-Bryant—who taught him a lot about how to treat other people.

"My grandmother was a teacher, and she shared what she had, giving canned vegetables and food out to the community, tutoring kids after school and everything," he remembers. "My grandfather, I used to go around town with him, and I was amazed by how much respect he commanded. There was one young lady who said, 'I owe your grandfather so much—I was in an abusive relationship, but your grandfather would make sure I was all right.' He talked to the gentleman, I guess you could say, in a stern way, and said that wasn't going to happen on his watch. He instilled in me that if you've got a chance to help somebody, you can't be afraid if it's the right thing to do."

Richardson is living out those lessons today—both as a Superior Court judge on the Chattahoochee Judicial Circuit, and as a trustee of the Community Foundation of the Chattahoochee Valley, where he established the John Rosetta Fund, named in honor of his grandparents, in 2021.

"I see people come into court with situations similar to what I saw when I was growing up," he explains. "If a young mother needs help to pay a bill, or an individual temporarily needs money for food, I just wanted to have an avenue to provide that kind of help."

And with the Community Foundation's help, he was able to start small and grow the fund over time with minimal difficulty. "Don't let the myth of the large endowment or the red tape deter you," Richardson advises aspiring donors. "One thing I give the Community Foundation credit for, it was pretty much automated. I took Betsy [Covington] my idea, told them the name I wanted to establish, and they pretty much did everything to put it in place for me."

Of course, his grandparents get plenty of credit, too. "I can't thank them enough for planting those seeds in me," Richardson says. "I'm just thankful to be able to take those seeds, water them, and watch them flourish!"

A photograph of Betty King, an elderly woman with short grey hair and glasses, sitting in a floral armchair. She is wearing a colorful patterned sweater over a blue top and a pearl necklace. Her hands are clasped in her lap. In the background, there is a lamp, a sofa, and a large window looking out onto a balcony with white chairs.

PARTNERING TO MAKE GENEROSITY EASY

Though she's originally from East Tennessee, Columbus has been home to Betty King for more than 70 years. "I feel like a native," she says. "I've seen a lot of tremendous things happen here."

So when a friend brought King to a presentation given by a stockbroker on trusts and foundations and the like, she was certain she'd found the perfect way to give back to the community that meant so much to her and her family. "I thought, this is what I need, because I had inherited some money, and I thought I needed to up my giving. It just sounded like the perfect answer to what I was looking for."

King established the Betty Lindsay King Charitable Fund at the Community Foundation of the Chattahoochee Valley in 2016. So far, she's made more than 40 grants to numerous local causes including the library, Columbus State University and First Presbyterian Church. And she hasn't forgotten about her roots—she also gives to her alma mater, the University of Tennessee, and the East Tennessee Historical Society, where she was once a trustee.

"I'm a big fan of keeping it here if we can," she says. "I can't heal the whole nation or the world all by myself, but I can put money back into the community and do what I can to help the people here that need help."

Though still sharp as a whip at 96, King is dealing with macular degeneration and "doesn't get out too much these days," which has made the convenience of working with the Community Foundation a major blessing. "I told Betsy Covington just the other day how much it means to have somebody to write my checks for me," she says with a laugh. "It does simplify my giving because I give pretty much the same thing yearly, and I like the hometown things and educational things. They keep good records, and if I need to make any changes for the year, it's just as simple as one phone call."

Between her charitable giving and the businesses she's been involved with over the years, including King's Fabrics, Betty King has become something of a local institution in her own way. "I can't complain, really, about my life," she says, her smile evident in her voice. "It's been interesting, and even though at times I have felt like I could use a little more money, everything has really been a plus."

INVESTING IN BROADER AREA HEALTHCARE ACCESS

Ten minutes matter when it comes to healthcare, says Jean Sumner, MD, dean of the Mercer University School of Medicine.

“If you have chest pains and go to the doctor’s office that same day, and the doctor says, ‘Let’s get an EKG,’ that may have prevented a heart attack,” she explains. “If you have a little fever and a cough, and you’re able to see the doctor right away, maybe you don’t get pneumonia. Or if you have COVID, maybe you catch it early.”

But what about people in rural areas, where the nearest hospital might be hours away? Even in Harris County, right in Columbus’ back yard, the 30-minute drive from Hamilton to a Columbus hospital can mean lower-income residents and people with mobility issues see a doctor only rarely—or not at all.

Fortunately, rural communities in Georgia have an ally in Mercer’s medical school, which was founded with a primary focus on training health professionals for underserved regions. And Harris County has allies in Ramona and Joey Loudermilk, whose generosity helped establish Mercer Medicine Harris County, a comprehensive primary care clinic that opened in Hamilton last April.

“Harris is a relatively wealthy county, but that doesn’t mean that everybody’s wealthy here. There are a lot of folks who are struggling,” says Joey, a juvenile court judge on the Chattahoochee Judicial Circuit. “For a lot of us, going back and forth to Columbus for appointments is not that big a deal, but there’s a segment of the population here for whom it’s a real problem to get that healthcare that they need. So to have it right here in the middle of the county, where it can serve people all the way from West Point to Shiloh, Pine Mountain, Waverly Hall, and all points in between, gives people an opportunity to travel just a few miles to get quality care.”

At the time the clinic was being considered, Mercer had built four rural primary care clinics across Middle and West Georgia. At a Rotary Club of Columbus meeting, Joey first heard of Mercer’s plans to build a fifth clinic in Harris County, repurposing the old library on North College Street in Hamilton. When he shared the idea with Ramona, a retired nurse, “We got very excited about it, and we felt that we wanted to be a part of it as far as raising funds.”

Working with Morgan Marlowe, chair of the Harris County Regional Healthcare Fund, the Loudermilks created a plan that would match community donations at certain intervals. Their matching contributions came from their endowed Donor Advised Fund at the Community Foundation of the Chattahoochee Valley, the Joey M. and Ramona L. Loudermilk Fund.

“It really didn’t seem like it took very long for those funds to be raised,” Joey recalls. “Morgan would let me know the money they’d raised had gotten to a certain point, and then it was a very simple matter to go back to the Community Foundation—in fact, I think I did most of it online.

“It was so easy to do this. Sometimes just figuring out a way to make the donation is the hard part, but if you make it easy for people, that’ll encourage them to give.”

Staffed by a full-time physician and nurse practitioner, the clinic offers primary care, X-rays, EKGs, a laboratory, point-of-care testing, flu shots, and physicals, as well as telehealth services, to the insured and uninsured alike. Joey hinted that the facility may add a pediatrician down the road.

“Obviously, as a juvenile court judge, I have a heart for kids and making sure we take care of them,” he says. “We love Harris County—we’ve been here for 23 years. It’s a very solid community with a lot of good people here.”

Taken as a whole, these services stand to have an impact on quality of life in Harris County that goes far beyond personal health, says Dean Sumner.

“Without healthcare, there’s little economic development, and without healthcare, children don’t get the education they need,” she explains. “But when you raise a community’s health status, you improve the ability to support your family and keep a job. Children attend school and do better when they’re healthy. We pick up diseases earlier. We feel what we’re doing is really important for many different reasons, and it would not be possible without good people like the Loudermilks who step up and say, ‘We’ll help you.’

“We have to have help from the community, but we want to build trust, and we tell them we’re not going away. We’re committed to helping their county grow. It’s an honor to help Georgia get healthier.”

STRENGTHENING LIBRARIES FOR LIFELONG LEARNING

Aiming to be “the best public library system in America” sounds like a lofty ambition indeed, but when you consider all that the Muscogee County Library Foundation has made possible for Columbus-area libraries, it starts to look downright attainable.

The MCLF was founded in 2003 to help support the creation of the new main library that is now part of the municipal complex on Macon Road. “Some really great members of our community very thoughtfully said, ‘We’re going to have this great building, and we’ll be able to keep the lights on and fill it with books and have a full staff, but to be world-class, we are going to need a foundation,’” says Laura Ann Mann, MCLF’s executive director for the past eight years. “They started the MCLF and placed our endowment at the Community Foundation to take advantage of their economy of scale and back-office support. We’re thrilled: the endowment doesn’t just sit there—it grows.”

As much as the term “public-private partnership” is used these days, foundations that benefit library systems are extremely rare outside of the country’s biggest cities. The money raised by the MCLF, though, has supercharged the library’s finances. And having the MCLF’s funds—and Funds; there are seven of them—“live” at CFCV allows MCLF to focus on raising money and selecting which library programs to foster. CFCV handles receipts, investing, reporting and grant payouts.

Not only does the partnership relieve Mann and the MCLF’s board of the responsibility of managing investments, audits and dealing with the IRS, it also provides an extra measure of support far beyond what a city the size of Columbus would typically be able to offer. According to Mann, most library systems around the country only receive between one and three percent of their budget from foundation support; the MCLF Funds, though, provide some eight percent of the Chattahoochee Valley Libraries’ budget.

“Private funds are the only way our library can be truly exceptional, grow with the times and remain relevant,” she says. “Through our Funds at CFCV, we fund books, but we also fund e-books and lots of other things in the collection—everything from telescopes and microscopes to ukuleles that people can take home and enjoy. The Chattahoochee Valley Libraries circulated more than a million items last year! When you consider there are 300,000 people in the Columbus area, I just think that’s amazing.”

Not only are Columbus’ library collections second to none, the seven Funds at CFCV that benefit

Fund	Established at CFCV	Purpose
Muscogee County Library Endowment Fund	2004	To support the services and programs of the public libraries in Muscogee County (endowed)

David and Barbara Rothschild Fund for the Muscogee County Libraries	2013	To support the services and programs of the public libraries in Muscogee County, including efforts to enhance learning through technology (endowed)
Muscogee County Library Ruth Brooks Yancey Endowment Fund	2015	To support the efforts of the public libraries in Muscogee County promoting early childhood literacy through onsite and outreach programming, especially that which reaches at-risk children. Funds may additionally be used for the design and maintenance of the Ruth Brooks Yancey Children's Garden (endowed)

MCLF Special Projects Fund	2017	To support future projects and transformational ideas that benefit the public libraries in Muscogee County (non-endowed) the MCLF's work have enabled the library system to embark on major projects that address glaring needs. Currently, the biggest such project is the renovation and expansion of the South Columbus Public Library on South Lumpkin Road, which will more than double the library's size—making it almost as big as the North Branch, says Alan Harkness, director of Chattahoochee Valley Libraries.

"It's located between an elementary school and a middle school, and every day when school gets out, a lot of the kids who don't have any other options come to the library. And that's what we want," Harkness says. "We're making that building the size that it needs to be so that the adults don't have to leave when kids get out of school. If you have an adult who's trying to access e-government or apply for a job online—and so much of that is online now—we don't want them to have to go. This will allow us to provide the kind of services that are greatly needed in that part of town."

Even though inflation drove the project's cost up by nearly 50% last year, the support of the MCLF ensured that it wouldn't have to be scaled back, Harkness continues. "I just couldn't sacrifice the size of the facility for the things we need to do, and the Foundation backs me up on that."

The MCLF has also funded programs such as the Early Childhood Outreach department, which brings the library to kids who can't get to the library themselves. And it underwrites special events such as the Maurice Sendak exhibit in 2019; the traveling "Americans and the Holocaust" exhibit later this year; and BrainFuse, which provides free online tutoring by actual teachers.

"We also have our annual Columbus Children's Book Festival, where we're able to bring world-class children's authors and illustrators to town, like Laura Numeroff, Frank Morrison, Arthur's Marc Brown, Big Bird's Carroll Spinney and R.L. Stine," Harkness adds. "And the day before we have our festival, they're going out to the schools, so maybe some of those kids who can't come in the next day still get to see authors and illustrators of books they know about and have them right there in the same room. It's just incredible."

A library is more than a bunch of bookshelves—ideally, it's a repository of knowledge, a gathering place, an educational institution and a museum all in one. Thanks to the support of the Muscogee County Library Foundation and its partnership with the Community Foundation, Columbus' libraries can fulfill all of those responsibilities in a fashion that's truly world-class.
